Tympanoplasty CASE STUDY

Provided by:

Alexander K. Malone, M.D.

Patient History:

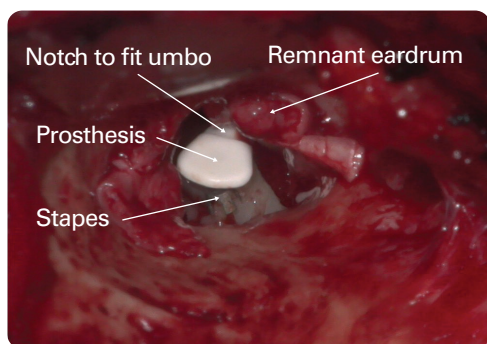

A 35-year-old patient presented with hearing loss and chronic drainage from her ear with any sort of water exposure. She was found to have a cholesteatoma that had eroded her incus.

Treatment:

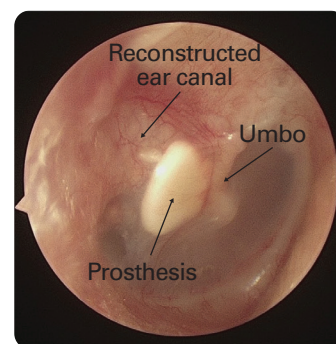

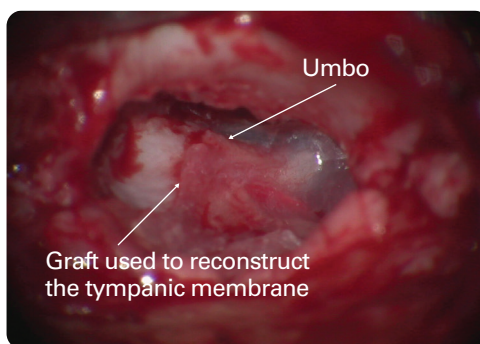

The patient was recommended surgery to address the cholesteatoma and hearing loss. She underwent an "inside-out" mastoidectomy to remove the cholesteatoma and her ossicles were reconstructed using a prosthesis.

Results:

The cholesteatoma was completely removed and the patient had no evidence of recidivism. She has also noted significant improvement in her hearing following the surgery. She is able to tolerate water exposure without any issue at this point.
